Splendor of the East 2012 is another spectacular show

"It is getting better every year."

This sums up the comments of many people who watched the Splendor of the East (SOE) 2012 cultural show held last May 4 at the Ford Community and Performing Arts Center in Dearborn.

This year's presentation of SOE, an annual project of the Council of Pacific Americans (CAPA) headed by President Arcie Gemino, was participated in by at least 100 performers belonging to 13 dance groups.

As in past SOE shows, SOE 2012 was a colorful, festive showcase of musical and dance presentations portraying the unique cultures of the Asian Pacific countries. It revolved around the theme, "Tribute to Mother Earth," and portrayed the appreciation by various ethnicities of the environment. (continued on page 2)

In the Mahan ancient Korea, this was a day of spiritual rites and a festival of songs, dances and wine. Traditionally, women washed their hair in water boiled with changpo, and people wore blue and red clothes and dyed hairpins red with the iris roots.

At the Dan-oh Festival set in Southfield on June 10, the revelers will appreciate traditional Asian art, play traditional Korean games and taste delicious Korean food. At the festival, annual an art contest participated in by students will be also held. Students are urged to attend the event and to join the contest.

It opened with dance numbers highlighting the creation of heaven and earth.

The opening act was followed by a Chinese dance called "Dance of the Lotus Goddesses" and choreographed by Ning Xue. The dancers' costumes were vibrantly colorful, and the dance was well choreographed.

This was followed by the "Flower Spring" dance presented by the Michigan Chinese Folk Dancing group. It was a tribute to spring, a season during which the "warm breeze blows away the winter cold away."

The Asian Indian Group headed by choreographer Parul Shah performed the next number entitled the "Peacock." The dance, which was distinctively Indian in origin, portrayed the responses by the peacock to the various seasons.

The Taiwanese ensemble staged a dance number entitled "The Wind" and characterized by a perfect combination of colors and the various sounds of the wind. The group belongs to the Michigan Chinese Association.

The Troy Chinese Folk Dance Group headed by choreographers Janet Yang and Jane Cheng presented "The Rain," a classic Chinese dance made distinctly memorable by the swaying and spinning of beautifully colored umbrellas against a background of falling rains.

A Korean solo dancer portrayed the role of the thunder as it was symbolically related to the anguish and pain in a woman's life.

The Filipino Tagumpay Dance Ensemble headed by choreographer Annabelle Martinez Cudilla opened the next act which was a tribute to the sea. The dance entitled "Plight of the Fish" which was portrayed as "magnificent creatures of the planet." The dance, which was comparatively well performed, showcased the terpsichorean skills of the Tagumpay dancers.

The Chinese Dance Troupe (youth group) performed the "Nian nian you yu," a popular saying that conveys a wish for good fortune. The dancers wore sparkling outfits and danced to a modernistic tune.

The Grand Rapids Polynesian Group headed by Filipino-American choreographer Minnie Morey presented "La Ora Na," a Tahitian dance depicting a story through hands and the hip movements to the beat of the drums.

This was followed by a hula number by the Tagumpay Dance Ensemble under the direction of Annabelle Martinez Cudilla. Entitled "Plants of the Sea," an implement dance using the bamboo sticks was a showcase of graceful hand and hip movements to the beat of the IPU.

The next act was ushered in by a number depicting the earth element "Fire" presented by the Napur Academy of Dance and choreographed by Radhika Acharya.

The Irish Step Dancers did a medley of Irish dances that required the dancers (numbering at least 25) doing complicated steps and circular movements. It was a showcase of the remarkable talent of the SOE 2012 lead choreographer Kimberly Miluski.

The Korean Cultural Dance Team presented the drum dance that featured the synchronous beating of small drums by the three dancers.

Another Filipino group composed of two dancers and one singer (Hunnah Antonnette Joseph) staged a number called "The Circle of the Wind." The dancers were Jasmine Lazaga and Justin Antonio.

The penultimate number was an impressive display of simultaneous rhythmic beating of various sizes of drums. Performed by a Taiko Drum group and entitled "Big Storm on Earth," the number brought to mind the fearsome sounds of storms, volcanoes and earthquakes.

The finale participated by all the performers was "a tribute to the world we live in" and an exhortation that "we can sing one song in peace and harmony." (Tony Antonio)

CAPA Scholars Recognized at SOE VIP Reception

An integral part of CAPA's mission is its commitment to education. Recently CAPA recognized two of its CAPA scholars, Angela Huang and Nisha Gopal. Angela is currently a senior at Novi High School and will be attending the University of Michigan this fall. She plans to major in marketing management at Michigan's Ross School of Business in her sophomore year. Community service has always been one of her dedications; in high school she served on the Novi Youth Council as well as worked to promote cultural diversity and acceptance through Youth Dialogues. She hopes to help CAPA in future by being an active volunteer in their many activities and events.

Nisha is senior at Plymouth High School. Starting this fall plans to attend the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor and pursue an education in the field of biochemistry. She has had the great pleasure of growing up in the Plymouth-Canton community, which has pushed her to be the most industrious, motivated, and fun loving person that she can be. With all that she has learned through activities such as Student Government, Tennis, National Honor Society, Cultural activities, and more, she plans to seize the opportunity gained from CAPA to make a difference in the APA community. She looks forward to another exciting year of learning, living, and growing!

CAPA is extremely proud and honored to recognize both Angela and Nisha for their past accomplishments and wishes them well in their future endeavors! (Noel Villajuan)

D.C. councilman's remark about Filipino nurses in US condemned

The Philippine Nurses Association of America (PNAA) considers a recent statement of Washington, D.C. Councilman Marion Barry as offensive and inappropriate. The PNAA said, "It is unfortunate that despite EEOC guidelines, Affirmative Action, the Alliance for International Ethical Recruitment Practices and National Council of State Boards of Nursing's policy respecting the rights of immigrants, Marion Barry remains ignorant that Filipino nurses (many of whom are US citizens), teachers and immigrants are valuable members of our community. The Filipino nurses' contribution to US healthcare is immeasurable, and their hard earned taxable dollars contribute to the US economy.”

“Barry’s intention of keeping the jobs available for the American people to address unemployment was diminished when he singled out Filipino registered nurses and teachers with his remark, ‘If you go to the hospital now, you’ll find a number of immigrants who are nurses, particularly from the Philippines, and no offense, but let’s grow our own teachers, let’s grow our own nurses, and so that we don’t have to go scrounging in our community clinics and other kinds of places, having to hire people from somewhere else.’ Barry, as a public official who represents the public, ought to know better than to single out a specific group in serving the needs of the American people.”

“PNAAs demand a formal apology from Marion Barry for his insensitive remarks. In a diverse and pluralistic society, we must learn how to respect each other. PNAAs is the official organization of Filipino nurses in the United States. T

The following is excerpted from The Washington Post article by Tim Craig published on April 24, 2012. “At a hearing Monday on the University of the District of Columbia’s budget, he (Barry) spoke about the need to train more African Americans to become nurses. In a video of his remarks, Barry noted a growing number of nurses are “immigrants” from the Philippines ‘[I]f you go to the hospital now, you’ll find a number of immigrants who are nurses, particularly from the Philippines,’ said Barry (D-Ward 8). And no offense, but let’s grow our own teachers, let’s grow our own nurses, and so that we don’t have to go scrounging in our community clinics and other kinds of places, having to hire people from somewhere else.”

“Barry said he was attempting to make a larger point about the university and the country’s demands for nurses. ‘UDC ought to be a premier nursing school in the country. The nursing shortage is so bad we have to bring in nurses from the Philippines. What’s negative about that? Nothing’s negative about that,’ he said. ‘It’s an asset to the United States to have access to nurses from other countries, but I want UDC to be the premier nursing institution.... Every time I mention a group, it’s not negative, it’s a fact.’

“Several of Barry’s council colleagues, Del. Eleanor Holmes Norton (D) and several Maryland lawmakers of Asian descent, called Barry’s statements as divisive. “Barry stressed during the hearing that local colleges could help lower the unemployment if schools such as UDC, which has a growing nursing program, redouble efforts to identify and train potential nurses. “Because of shortages nationwide, for years hospitals have had to turn overseas to bolster their ranks of nurses.

More than half the foreign-trained nurses come from the Philippines, according to a 2005 study by Minority Nurse, which focuses on career and education training.” Other Asian American groups, including the Office of the Philippine Ambassador, have also condemned Barry’s remarks.
